FOREWORD Can Philadelphia affect the cost of living Are all of the factors in high-cost living national and international, or are some of them sufficiently local to be affected by purposeful civic action on the part of the city The cost of goods depends upon: (a) the cost of producing them, (b) the cost of getting buyers for them, (c) the cost of getting them to the buyers, (d) the price that buyers can profitably be forced to pay through united organization or through the other countless means of keeping prices up. Is it possible for Philadelphia to evolve a program whereby one or more of these costs can be lowered This report is a preliminary study to find out whether a program can be adopted by the city that will lower the cost of getting country produce from farmers in the surrounding counties to Philadelphia consumers. To clear the way from the farm to the city and from the city to the farm will decrease the farmers transportation costs and the amount of time spent in marketing his goods, and hence will mean to him better prices and better service; will enhance the facilities through which the stores in the small towns can more economically handle both their incoming and their outgoing freight; will extend the bounds of social life in each agricultural district; give to the retail stores a lessened transportation charge; give to Philadelphia manufacturing establishments and stores increased facilities for sales;...
