Excerpt: . guished in every benevolent public work and movement of the day. It is not intended at this time to follow him in these various labors, a recital of which would fill a large volume. It may be enough to say that he was truly a Christian philanthropist; most unostentatiously laboring, by personal influence, by correspondence, and by aid of the public press, for the promotion of any cause of humanity he was engaged in, or for the suppression of iniquity and wrong. He published several tracts and pamphlets on the evils of intemperance. The subject of war, with all its attendant horrors, was brought closely home to him by the trials of the American Revolution. The sufferings of the soldiers, and of the inhabitants on whom they were quartered, formed the object of many a visit to the officers camp or to the public hospitals; and the iniquity of the whole system, especially its entire inconsistency with the Christian profession, impressed him so deeply that he printed and circulated, in large numbers, a treatise entitled Thoughts on the Nature of War; commending it by special letters to persons of distinction in Europe and America, for their perusal and reflection. In 1778, during the excitement of the American Revolution, he issued a small work entitled Serious Reflections on the Times, addressed to the Well-Disposed of every Religious Denomination. The spirit of the whole book may be gathered from its closing paragraph: -- Let us..
